

This evocative photograph by Vytautas Babelis captures a historic Venetian scene enveloped in a misty, dreamlike atmosphere. The image is layered with textures that resemble condensation or aged glass, giving the impression of looking at an old, weathered photograph or through a foggy window. Key architectural elements, such as a domed church and a tall bell tower, emerge through the haze, their details softened by the ethereal overlay. A bright, glowing spot in the sky adds to the surreal ambiance, resembling either a sun or a mysterious light source illuminating the scene. This effect enhances the photo's nostalgic, almost ghostly quality, blending past and present into a single, haunting image of Venice.
